

MONORAIL CLEAR

“Monorail Clear”

Copyright © 2008 by Kristi Petersen Schoonover

This is a work of fiction. The characters and situations in this work are fictitious, and any resemblance to real events or persons living or dead is purely coincidental.

This work is intended for entertainment purposes only as “Disney Park Fan Fiction”, so to speak, and is licensed under the Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 3.0 Unported License. This means you may copy, distribute, and transmit this work, in whole or in part, as long as credit is given to Kristi Petersen Schoonover, but you may not use this work for commercial purposes (in other words, it’s free, but not for sale). To view a copy of this license, visit <http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/3.0/> or send a letter to Creative Commons, 171 Second Street, Suite 300, San Francisco, California, 94105, USA.

Disney attractions, characters, films, parks, resorts and other properties, both intellectual and corporeal, mentioned in this work, as well as their copyrights, registrations, and trademarks, belong to The Walt Disney Companies.

Kristi Petersen Schoonover, Admit One Press, and Admit One Literary Theme Park are not in any way connected with the Walt Disney Companies or any of its affiliates, and this work is neither endorsed nor authorized by the Walt Disney Companies.

Get Admit One Literary Theme Park delivered to your Inbox once a month! To sign up, send an e-mail to admitonepress@gmail.com.

Casey is haunted by the Magic Kingdom ticket his brother was clutching when he died. He'd kept it; this morning, though, it isn't in the drawer.

At work, he locks up the monorail fleet for the night and starts trekking to his car, only to stop when he hears the whoosh of a monorail on a nearby beam.

"I know I secured them," he says on a call to his supervisor. "Should I go back and investigate? Someone could be joyriding."

"No one told you?" his boss replied. "We have special hours for guests who held non-expiring tickets at death."